1.5 New Degree Programmes and Research Initiatives

The Institute at present is in the process of implementing plans to expand and diversify its postgraduate programmes by widening access to programmes and introducing new programmes with an interdisciplinary and a multidisciplinary focus. The introduction of new degree programmes will continue to address the requirements of specific sectors of society and the economy. Further, the Institute is diverting more resources and facilities to encourage and support research undertaken by its postgraduate students while maintaining a productive and high quality profile of research through publications and presentations. These efforts will broaden the current engagement of the Institute in research and development activities.

1.6 Academic Collaborations

The institute has its plans to establish effective academic links with local and foreign individuals, groups and reputed organizations in order to expand its horizons of postgraduate education and research. Collaboration with local bodies such as ministries, departments and agencies, NGOs, research institutes, other higher educational and training institutes and the private sector is necessary to enhance the quality of programmes and the employability of graduates. The internationalization of degree and research programmes requires enhanced collaboration with foreign Universities and higher educational institutes, research institutes, multilateral agencies, International Non-governmental organizations, etc. Collaboration with foreign institutions will provide opportunities to maintain international standards in our programmes and provide foreign exposure for our students and staff. At present, the Master of Development Practice (MDP) and Master of Human Rights and Multiculturalism (MHRMC) programmes are offered by the Institute under foreign/global partnership programmes.

In 2016, the Institute won a project together with the University of Southeast Norway (USN) under NORPART project grants for academic cooperation in Human Rights and Multiculturalism. The project involves student and staff exchanges, research collaboration and joint degree programmes in the field. So far, under the project 15 students of the Institute have received scholarships to study for one semester at the USN on credit transfer basis and three postgraduate students of the USN also have studied at the PGIHS for one semester under the project. The Institute recently signed an MoU with Sichuan University of China for similar student and staff exchange programmes and research collaboration. Another MoU with the American University, Washington DC was also signed for the establishment of Gender Economics training and research programmes at the PGIHS. The activities of this MoU will be supported by initial funding from the Foundation Open Society Institute in Switzerland. The PGIHS has made arrangements with the Buddhist College of Minnan (BCM) for long-term student exchange under which Chinese students will follow programmes at the PGIHS. In 2018, the Institute received 07 students from the BCM to its study programmes and the number increased to 15 in 2019. Further, the Institute is about to sign an MOU with the Graduate School of Asian and African Area Studies of Kyoto University Japan to create opportunities especially for student exchange and promotion of research.

1.7 Research Congress, Seminars and Journal

For knowledge created in different fields of study to have an impact on society, it has to be effectively disseminated. To address the issue, the institute commenced its annual Research Congress in 2017. The PGIHS Research Congress was successfully held in 2018 and 2019 too. It provides opportunities for the students of the Institute to present their research work at an internationally recognized academic forum. The institute also organizes conferences, symposia, workshops jointly with other organizations. Recently the Institute conducted a conference on Social Safeguard Measures of Sri Lanka's major development projects in collaboration with the World Bank and another on Greening Belt and Road Initiative in collaboration with the National Academy of Development and Strategy of the Renmin University, China and the Pathfinder Foundation, Sri Lanka. It also conducted two workshops on Landscape Ecological Planning and Geo-space Mapping with Open Source Maps. These programmes were highly beneficial for both students and the staff of the PGIHS. The Institute initiated the publication of its bi-annual research journal, namely the Journal of Humanities and Social Sciences (JHS) in 2018 providing ample opportunity for its students to publish their research work. The Institute has now published three issues of the JHS.

1.8 Student Societies and Alumni Association

In 2018, the Institute initiated the establishment of its student societies and alumni association. The student societies provide an environment for students to link with activities of the Institute as an organized body. The students may form programme level student societies and a General Student Society (GSS) of the Institute. The GSS was established in 2018 and organized events successfully in 2019. The alumni association of the Institute will also provide opportunities for those who studied at the PGIHS to link with activities of the Institute as an organized body. The Institute will establish the PGIHS Alumni Association in 2019.

Section 12

Guidelines on Plagiarism and Prevention of Plagiarism

12.1 Plagiarism

Under the current regulations of the University of Peradeniya, plagiarism is considered as a serious and punishable examination offence under the category of copying. At postgraduate level however, plagiarism is a serious offence covering broad areas and issues including both ethical and legal. Plagiarism at the postgraduate level can occur in the following cases: (i) in coursework assignments, homework, presentations and project reports, etc., (ii) in thesis research and thesis writing, and (iii) in publications and presentations at workshops/seminars and other forums.

12.2 Forms of Plagiarism

The following are the most common forms of plagiarism:

(i) Direct plagiarism:

Direct plagiarism refers to the act of taking someone else's ideas and work and producing the same one's own idea/work. Direct plagiarism occurs when someone quotes from published or unpublished material of others without citation/reference. In one type of direct plagiarism, the structure of sentences and words remain the same but some words in the original text are deleted and other words with similar meaning inserted. Direct plagiarism is considered a serious offense and often leads to punishment and legal action under copyright law or criminal charges.

(ii) Purchase-and produce as yours

This is also another type of common plagiarism in higher education and research. If a student pays for someone else to write/prepare his/her assignments/reports/any artistic work/ a thesis, it comes under this type of plagiarism because the written document contains ideas and views of someone else and not those of the student who claims the ownership of the document or the work done. A similar work done by a friend / a family member of the student and submitted with the name of the student, without any monetary transaction, is also an offense under this type of plagiarism.

(iii) Self-plagiarism:

Self-plagiarism can occur mainly in two ways:

First, self-plagiarism occurs if a student converts an assignment, report, any artistic work, a thesis/a part of a thesis submitted for a course/degree, an article/a paper previously published in full or substantially similar content to another course/degree or publication in a journal. This is considered a serious offense under the policies on prevention of plagiarism.

Second, self-plagiarism occurs when a student uses ideas/phrases from his/her previous work without citation in his/her present work. So long as verbatim quotation of large parts of the previous work is avoided and due citation is made for ideas and phrases used in the current work, this type of self-plagiarism can be avoided easily.

(iv) Paraphrasing without citation from published or unpublished work of others:

Plagiarism occurs when paraphrasing from published or unpublished work of others without due acknowledgement/citation. Paraphrasing becomes a serious offence when a student produces someone else's idea as his/her own or when a student combines ideas of a number of writers and produces the same as his/her own. If a student borrows original ideas/information from the works of other authors and produces them as his/her own, the student commits a serious offense under the policies of prevention of plagiarism/ copyrights or property rights law.

(v) Copy-and-paste (mosaic/patchwork) plagiarism:

Copy-and-paste plagiarism occurs when a student copies and pastes texts from different sources, adding them together to make a new text by slightly changing wordings of the original texts. In practice, copying may be done mostly from unknown and less popular websites or internet sources.

Copy-and-paste plagiarism may also occur when a student copies and pastes several sentences or a paragraph/a part of a paragraph, even by slightly changing words, without quotation marks but with a citation to the original work. This becomes an offense as the student does not provide the full credit to the original source of the idea.

Copy-and-paste plagiarism is difficult to detect manually as the original sources may be not in common usage. However, plagiarism detecting software can easily trace copy-and-paste plagiarism in documents.

(vi) Other Types of Plagiarism:

In addition to the above, the use of views of others not necessarily expressed in written form without due acknowledgement, accepting or offering authorship without sufficient intellectual contribution, borrowing words and ideas of others and citing them incorrectly (unintentional plagiarism) also come under the offenses of plagiarism.

- (iii) Plagiarism may appear in research publications in the Journal of Humanities and Social Sciences and/or proceedings of the PGIHS Research Congress.

12.4 Punishment for Plagiarism at Postgraduate Studies and Research

- (i) For plagiarism appearing in materials of in-course assessments of courses and guided projects:

Punishment may be in the form of (i) verbal/written warning issued by the teacher or the supervisor, (ii) reduction of marks by a certain percentage, (iii) rejection and re-submission of the material within a given period of time and a penalty of marks on the resubmitted material.

In cases of (ii) or (iii) punishments given above, the relevant teacher or the supervisor should inform the matter to the Director of the Institute in writing with evidence. The Director reserves the right to take further disciplinary action depending on the severity of the offense.

- (ii) For plagiarism appearing in a thesis of a research degree:

If the plagiarism is detected before the submission of the thesis, the punishment may be in the form of an official letter of warning issued by the Director based on reports/ evidence submitted by the supervisor/s.

If the plagiarism is detected in the examination process of the thesis, the punishment may be in the following forms: (i) The Viva-voce Examination Board assigns a fail grade to the thesis and recommends the student to resubmit the thesis after major revisions (to remove plagiarized parts), (ii) The Viva-voce Examination Board rejects the thesis. If the Viva-voce Examination Board rejects the thesis on the evidence of plagiarism, the Director of the Institute will take necessary action to inquire into the matter.

- (iii) For plagiarism appearing in articles/papers submitted for the publication in the Journal of Humanities and Social Sciences and/or in abstracts to be published in Proceedings of the PGIHS Research Congress.

If the author is a student of the Institute, the punishment may be in the form of (i) resubmission of the paper/article/abstract correcting for plagiarism; (ii) rejection of the paper/article/abstract with a written warning from the Director of the Institute; and (iii) rejection of the paper/article/abstract and considered for further disciplinary action.

If the author is not a student of the Institute, the punishment may be in the form of (i) resubmission of the paper/article/abstract with corrections; (ii) rejection of the paper/article/abstract and non-consideration of papers /articles/ abstracts submitted by the individual for a period of one year, (iii) rejection of the paper/ article/ abstract and the Director of the Institute reports the matter to the employer of the individual concerned.

12.5 Procedures of Further Disciplinary Action

- (i) Once plagiarism is detected, the relevant teacher, supervisor, examiner, panel of oral examiners, the viva-voce examination board, or any other authorized person should report the matter annexing all materials of evidence to the Director of the Institute in writing. The Director will impose punishment as given in Sub-section 12.4 depending on the degree of the severity of the offense.
- (ii) The Director of the Institute if he/she feels that further investigation is necessary after a preliminary inquiry of the reports and the materials of evidence, should send a request with the approval of the relevant Board of Study and the Board of Management to the Vice-Chancellor of the University for further inquiry and recommendation of punishment. In such a case, the Director should forward all relevant documents and evidence to the Vice Chancellor for consideration.

12.6 Instructions for the Prevention of Plagiarism

Students are advised to adhere to the following instructions to avoid plagiarism in their postgraduate work at the Institute:

- (i) Provide due acknowledgement and recognition in the text itself to the original work from which you borrow idea /arguments/information by summarizing the works of other writers in your own words and indicating their contribution to the literature in your work with citations;
- (ii) Enclose any verbatim text taken from another work/source in quotation marks and provide with citation just before or immediately below the quotation and avoid excessive quotation from the works of other writers. Make sure that all quotations are related to your analysis and are adequately discussed and analyzed in your work.
- (iii) Use your own words and structure of sentences when you are paraphrasing the works of other writers and indicate the contribution of each work in the text and also make sure that you re-produce the same meaning of the original work when you are paraphrasing the works of other writers as misinterpretation or wrong interpretation of the works of other writers is also an offense under plagiarism;

- (iv) Always provide a citation/citations when you are not sure whether a concept/principle/fact is common knowledge. Failure to provide citation for concepts/principles/ facts which are believed to be common knowledge by the student also ends in committing plagiarism;
- (v) For any argument/idea/finding of a previous work, always cite the original work. If the original work is not accessible /available, then produce the argument/idea/finding as produced by any other author citing the original work giving reference to the later work. In this case, do not include the original work as a cited work in your reference list /bibliography.
- (vi) Reveal all variables, equations and models, sources of data, methods and techniques used in the analysis, results and findings of your work enabling someone else to re-employ them, re-produce results and test the validity of your findings.
- (vii) Always adhere to the spirit of academic work and ethics of academic writing and avoid re-using your own previous work without citation. It is not recommended to depend heavily on your previous work even with proper citation as it makes the contribution of your current work repetitive.
- (viii) If the current publication is a re-production of a previous work, clearly indicate the details of the previous publication and clearance of copyrights and adhere to academic ethics of re-production.
- (ix) Make sure to agree upon the authorship and order of authorship before the publication and only to include names of persons who have made a substantial contribution to the work as authors.

- (ii) With the approval of the supervisor/s and the relevant Board of Study, a student may write the M.Phil./ PhD thesis in one of the following formats:

(i)	Monograph style work analyzing a particular problem identified on existing knowledge	This is a conventional thesis format. It is based on a pre-identified research problem and with interrelated objectives to analyze its interconnected aspects using a common research methodology.
(ii)	Collection of connected essays and articles on a particular theme or an issue	This type of thesis may be written as self-contained yet related essays in an area of study. Each essay may have its own specific research problem, objectives and methodology, analysis and conclusion/s.
(iii)	Critical edition with a historical introduction and with/without annotated translation.	A thesis in this category may include translations, deciphering and other similar contributions in addition to critical analysis and commentary.

- (iii) The research proposal should be developed in the area of study as given in the synopsis submitted for admission/ as instructed by the supervisor/s. A student may be allowed to change the title of the thesis within the area of study in the process of proposal development.
- (iv) If a student wishes to change the area of study during the progress of his/her studies, he/she is required to obtain the approval of the relevant Board of Study to do so. Requests for changes in thesis title, area of study should be submitted to the Director of the Institute through the supervisor/s.

Section 17

Guidelines for Presentations of Guided Project, Research Proposal and Thesis

17.1 Background

The postgraduate students, especially research degree students, of the Institute are required to make presentations in public seminars, research proposals, research congress and viva-voce examinations of their theses to share their knowledge and findings. The coursework degree students are also required to make presentations of their assignments, projects, etc. The guidelines provided here, although not exhaustive, are intended to help and facilitate a student to make a presentation worthy of academic excellence that befits a postgraduate student, an independent researcher and a professional.

17.2 Preliminaries for Presentation

(i) Getting the Purpose and the Audience Clear

It is always important to have a clear understanding of the purpose and the audience of the presentation before you prepare for the presentation. For example, an oral examination of a thesis and a paper presentation in a conference will have different purposes and audience and therefore requirements of the presentations may be different.

(ii) Choosing Information and Facts

It is also important to prepare a list of information and facts to be presented. Given the time constraint and the purpose, the student needs to prepare a list of information and facts under each heading in order of priority for presentation to be effective.

(iii) Using Visual Aids in Presentations

The use of visual aids such as MS PowerPoint to present ideas, information and facts is highly recommended. In a presentation, it is important to pass/communicate ideas to the audience clearly, succinctly and quickly. Visual aids help the student to achieve this purpose and will keep him/her on track in presenting information to the point.

(iv) Practicing the presentation

A few days prior to the presentation, the student should find a friendly audience, however small, and go through the presentation using the visual aids. The comments received from the audience may help the student to revisit the arrangement of information and the visual aids and also boost his/her confidence.

17.3 Directions for Presentation of Guided Project

- (i) Since the guided project covers a narrow area of study and may be of limited intellectual capacity, it is easy to handle knowledge requirement in the presentation. However, more attention should be paid to the display of soft-skills such as preparedness for presentation, presentation skills, group work and responsibility and time management.
- (ii) Since this is a joint presentation and only 15 minutes are available for the group, it is recommended to use visual aids in the presentation. If you are using MS PowerPoint as your visual aid, do not use more than 10 slides to present your whole project report.
- (iii) In your presentation, emphasize the following: title of the project and information of the group (slide 1); objective/s of the project (slide 2); literature review (slide 3); methodology including data and variables, sources of information, collection of information, tools and techniques of data analysis (slides 4-6); results and findings (slides 7-8); summary/conclusions (slide 9); and references (slide 10).
- (iv) Arrange the presentation among group members in such a way that each member of the group presents at least two slides. Do not rely on your partners too much in answering questions and in the discussion. However, you should give sufficient time for your partners/group members to answer questions or engage in the discussion.

17.4 Directions for Preparing for Presentation of Research Proposal

- (i) The Research Proposal presentation does not involve an examination but requires you to satisfy the panel of evaluators who are mainly specialists in the area of study. You should have the flexibility to consider the points raised by the panel members and be willing to discuss the feasibility of incorporating such views into your research.
- (ii) It is recommended to use audio-visual aids in the presentation. If you are using MS Power Point as your visual aid, do not use more than 12 slides to present your thesis proposal as you have only 20 minutes for the presentation.
- (iii) In your presentation, the following should be highlighted:
 - Title of the thesis;
 - Background of research
 - Key references and research gaps
 - Research question/s
 - Research objective/s
 - Hypotheses of research (if any)
 - Research methodology inclusive of theoretical model and modelling, research design (survey, experimental, etc.), population and selection of sample, data collection methods or instruments (questionnaire, case study formats, textual study, etc.), tools and techniques of presenting and analyzing data,

Chapter arrangement of the thesis
Limitations of the study
Key references, and Timeline of the research

- (iv) In the discussion, the panel of evaluators may ask questions focusing more on literature and research gaps, research questions, research objectives, suitability of the title, feasibility of the study, importance of the study, soundness and adequacy of the methodology, limitations of the study, etc.

17.5 Directions for Presentation of Thesis at the Viva-voce Examination

- (i) The presentation at the viva-voce examination should be a highly specialized work resulting from an in-depth research. The audience consists of both the general public and experts in the field and some of them are thesis examiners who have evaluated the thesis.
- (ii) The presentation at the viva-voce examination will be held as a public seminar and therefore you should be able to discuss and communicate highly specific and advanced subject matter in a simple and general format.
- (iii) The student should also be prepared to engage in a discussion on advanced subject matter related to the study after the presentation. In the discussion, the student should demonstrate advanced knowledge related to the thesis, the methodological soundness of the research, analytical capacity and power, contributions to knowledge, validity of conclusions and their policy implications.
- (iv) The Viva-voce Examination Board will also evaluate the student's presentation skills, analytical skills, ability to answer questions related to the study, communication skills and the ability to pass on knowledge and findings effectively.
- (v) It is recommended to use audio-visual aids in the presentation and the discussion. If you are using MS PowerPoint as your visual aid, do not use more than 15 slides to present your thesis work as you have only about 20 minutes for the presentation.
- (vi) In your presentation, the following should be highlighted:
 - Title of the thesis;
 - Background of research
 - Research gaps
 - Research question/s
 - Research objective/s
 - Hypotheses of research (if any)
 - Research methodology inclusive of theoretical model and modelling, research design (survey, experimental, etc.), population and selection of sample, data collection methods or instruments (questionnaire, textual study, etc.), tools and techniques of presenting and analyzing data

Limitations of the study

Results and findings of the research by chapters

Conclusions/concluding remarks

Validity and policy implications of conclusions

Your contribution to the literature/ knowledge

Suggestions for future studies

- (vii) Give details of publication if you have already published a chapter of the thesis as an article/ a paper, at the beginning of the discussion of the chapter. This information will help you convince the Viva-voce Examination Board of the importance of the study and your contribution to the existing knowledge in the related field.
- (viii) In the discussion, the members of the Viva-voce Examination Board may ask questions focusing more on research gaps, research questions, research objectives, soundness and adequacy of the methodology, limitations of the study, research findings and their policy implication, your contribution to the knowledge in the related field and suggestions for future studies, etc.
- (ix) The student should not depend on his/her supervisor/s in the presentation and discussion. A supervisor participates in the Viva-voce Examination Board as an observer and he/she engages in the discussion only if the Chairperson of the Viva-voce Examination Board requests him/her to do so.
- (x) The student should be able to explain matters in detail and answer questions related to the research independently. However, it not expected from the student to provide clear answers or detailed explanations on any matter which is not related to his/her research or area of study.

17.6 General Instructions for Presentations

- (i) It is generally distracting to the audience to view too many slides in a short presentation. Therefore, you should restrict the number of slides in your presentation.
- (ii) It is important to arrange your presentation in a logical flow, preferably based on matters to be presented. When presenting different analytical chapters, follow a similar flow of information.
- (iii) It is highly advisable not to load a slide with too much text or information. Your audience wants you to explain matters in detail with a simple guide from your slides. Use clear visual aids such as illustrations, figures, tables, pictures, photographs, audio-videos, etc. to make the passing of information more interesting and effective.

- (iv) You should avoid reading the text included in slides and focus on explaining the meaning and ideas in the text. Use the text included as a guide for analysis and discussion. It is worthwhile to repeat the main message of the text twice.
- (v) You should not include any personal matters of you/ your supervisors/ any other persons in your presentation.
- (vi) It is important to make sure that you maintain a clear voice loud enough to reach the last person in the room. But you should be careful not to speak too loudly because it may annoy your audience.
- (vii) It is recommended to save your files on a data stick or other portable memory device with backups and bring them to the presentation venue. You should arrange all supporting documents in a particular order and bring them to the presentation venue for reference if required.
- (viii) You should check the technical requirements for accuracy and suitability before the beginning of the presentation with the help of the technical officers of the Institute.
- (ix) At the presentation, you should be relaxed, be conscious about time, keep eye-contact with the audience, believe in what you are saying, be natural with non-verbal actions, make it easy to go back to a previous slide to prove/elaborate a point, demonstrate your in-depth knowledge in the different aspects of the research you are dealing with, etc. You should not worry about time management during the discussion period as it is the responsibility of the Chairperson of the session.
- (x) At the discussion, you should listen to the commentators/ examiners carefully and allow them to complete their comments or questions before answering. You should not make any unwarranted personal remarks on any researcher, supervisor, examiner, officers, fellow students, etc. during your presentation and discussion. You should also avoid any unpleasant verbal exchange with any individual in the audience.
